

Complaint Handling

BACKGROUND

In 1996, the Financial Services Commission of Ontario (FSCO) created the Office of the Insurance Ombudsman (OIO) and a system for the informal resolution of consumer complaints about the business practices of insurance companies. The system places primary responsibility on insurance companies to handle and resolve consumer complaints about their products and services. The OIO deals only with complaints that are not resolved by companies within a reasonable time.

January 1, 2001, FSCO required insurance companies to collect and submit consumer complaint data to the OIO on a quarterly basis. Individual company data is submitted in confidence and is not published or released upon request. Complaint data is published by the OIO on an aggregate basis by line of business. The collected information provides the OIO with an indication of the proportion of complaints addressed by the industry allows them to track complaint trends and assists in the identification of marketplace issues.

In 2001, FSCO also required companies to amend their protocol to ensure that complainants who have unresolved complaints are aware of his or her right to have a complaint reviewed by the OIO if it has not been resolved within a reasonable period of time through the Company's Complaint Handling Protocol.

DEFINITION OF A REPORTABLE COMPLAINT

A complaint is the expression of at least one of the following elements that persists after being considered and examined at the operational level capable of making a decision on the matter:

- i. a reproach against an organization;
- ii. the identification of a real or potential harm that a consumer has experienced or may experience;
or
- iii. a request for a remedial action.

Complaints are generally expressed in writing through correspondence, email, fax or other form that allows a complaint to be kept on file. Where a consumer complains by phone or in person and the complaint is handled and examined by the person responsible for the examination of complaints and delegated as such in the organization's policy, the complaint must be documented so that it can be kept on file.

The initial expression of dissatisfaction by a consumer, whether in writing or otherwise, will not be considered a complaint where the issue is settled in the ordinary course of business. However, in the event the consumer remains dissatisfied and such dissatisfaction is referred to the person who is responsible for the examination of complaints and designated as such in the Organization's policy, then it will be considered as a complaint.

However, organizations must refrain from any undue delay in referring a matter to a higher level solely for the purpose of avoiding reporting requirements.

Where a consumer remains dissatisfied after a reasonable attempt has been made to settle the issue, organizations without a multilevel complaint examination structure are then considered to have received a complaint.
